Dear Admissions Committee,

It is my great honour to recommend Lujia Shen as a female student who has excelled in both academics and practice. For the last four years, I, Chen Yin, Vice Dean of the College of Food and Pharmacy at Zhejiang Ocean University, have been closely in touch with Lujia. Working as her vice dean of the college and supervisor has given me a thorough awareness of her strengths and talents.

Her GPA in the course "Practicum in Field Specimen Collection and Production" I oversaw was 3.7. This course stresses the need of practical skills in addition to imparting professional knowledge of plant taxonomy, collecting, and specimen creation. In class, Lujia shown remarkable interest and energy; she learnt every lesson precisely.

Lujia actively engaged in plant gatherings during the field trip to Taohua Island in Zhoushan. She participated actively in the group debate, demonstrating strong professional expertise and guiding the students in the identification and categorisation of medicinal plants. Lujia helped the pupils to have a better knowledge of the plants by thoroughly describing the medicinal worth and growing behaviour of every plant. To help students grow in their observation and analytical abilities, she also urged them to note their findings throughout the gathering process.

By means of this exercise, Lujia not only improved her practical abilities but also showed outstanding collaboration and passion of studying, thus inspiring her peers. Her account of the field trip in class was welcomed by the instructor and peers, therefore strengthening the cohesiveness of the classroom.

Reflecting her sense of duty and devotion, Lujia, the class secretary, led the class to win several wins in college and school-level events using great leadership abilities. She actively plans sports events and volunteer activities as well as cultural events, therefore improving class cohesiveness and involvement. She is excellent at inspiring her peers. Furthermore, Lujia, director of the New Media Operation Department of the Admission Office, shows her creative thinking and pragmatic abilities by daring her to attempt new things and advance the department. To further her worldwide viewpoint, enhance her language and cross-cultural communication abilities, and completely show her academic excitement and proactivity, she also applied for an exchange study program at the University of Malaya.

Lujia Shen is a very gifted student who has shown exceptional performance in organisational and managerial as well as intellectual spheres. I really suggest it to her and hope you will give her additional chances to exhibit her skills on a larger scale.

Yours sincerely,

Prof. Yin CHEN
Vice Dean
